Then tis not in the gay and festive hour, Blest spirit, that thou to charm us hast power; Bright scenes may deceive, but trials alone The falsehood or faith of friends can make known. And when thou art fix d in the human heart, Though storms assail it, thou lt never depart. Like insects, those frail and beautiful things, Some sport in the sunshine, like them too have wings; They bask in the light of a summer s sky, But at winter s approach they wither and die; And such, in our fortune s blight and decay, Like these gaudy insects, vanish away. O much-injur d goddess, say, shall it be, Shall heartless deceivers counterfeit thee? Shall they vilely profane thy sacred name, Of bright truth...
