Reviews

This ebook will never be effortless to get started on studying but extremely fun to read through. It is actually written in easy phrases and never difficult to understand. It is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding, once you begin to read the book.

Hypodermic injection is, in man, the best method of administration. A sterile injection of 40 c.c. of normal saline, containing dissolved in it 40 c.g. of nucleinate of sodium, made in one or two convenient places, the flanks or the outer surface of the thighs, causes in a few hours some local pain, which can be allayed by the application of opium fomentations. After twenty-four hours, a slight amount of swelling and redness appears, but has disappeared by the following day. Two or three days later, a second injection is given, and a third, later on, the dose being diminished in each instance. There is, in this way, kept up a hyperleucocytosis favourable to the fight undertaken. Nucleinate of sodium appears to act by a quick and somewhat lasting increase in the function of phagocytosis. Its mode of action is powerful, and must be proportioned to the nature of the case. The increase in the leucocytes is chiefly in the mono-nuclear type, and is found in six to eight hours after injection. It continues to increase for about forty-eight hours, and lasts for four or five days, decreasing slowly. Chantemesse determined the opsonic index to be 1 60 before, and 2 50, twenty-four hours after the injection of nucleinate of sodium, in the case of a man suffering from perforation. Clinically, the following facts were noted. In typhoid patients, who, after haemorrhage from the bowel, complained of sharp pains in the...
